Forget-Her-Notes

By Amy Brecount White

Delicious and magical, here is a debut novel about a new (and slightly misunderstood) girl at an exclusive boarding school. Laurel has always loved flowers, but when a class project calls for research into the Victorian language of flowers, she makes a potent discovery. Her affinity for blooming things is actually age-old magic, passed from one generation to the next—a bittersweet gift from her beloved mother, who's recently died—and it gives Laurel the power to make people fall in and out of love. Laurel's introduction to the secret society of flowerspeakers is rife with complications and mishaps—especially when her classmates convince her to use her magic at the prom. This evocative coming-of-age story lingers in the air much like the fragrant blooms that determine Laurel's fate so mysteriously.
